Artistic Posters in France.

The two forms of advertising that the French excel in are posters and window display. The good taste exhibited in these two directions makes a walk along their streets a delight and an art treat.

A broad, sketchy effect and a daring scheme of color are relied upon to do the business. The best artists do not disdain to design for the lithographer. In the window of a well run store on the Boulevard des Capucines I noticed the original of a poster that had been used for the Molin Rouge. I was curious to know how much such a thing could be worth and I bought it. The price was 1,200 francs ($240).

But it bore the signature of Chéret, who is the acknowledged master of the poster art in France. Each example of his work that I saw was a masterpiece. There are even places in Paris where collectors buy posters, and the best examples cost from 5 francs (10 cents) up. Posters without the lettering are still more highly esteemed and cost about 10 times as much. Rare examples frequently command fancy prices. Chéret, Guillaume, Frépat, Gans, Choubré, Faria, Verne, etc., are the best known designers, and the connoisseur looks for the signature on a street advertisement as naturally as he would for the artist's name on the painting hung at the salon. No better example could be given to the extreme to which this art has been carried abroad than the poster exhibition which is now being held in Brussels. A special building is given up to it, and people pay their admission fee, wander about through the various rooms and study the different examples critically, just as we should do at an exhibition of the Water Color Society in New York.—Printers' Ink.

A Fatal Remark.

"But surely," responded Jinks, "seeing is believing."

"Not necessarily," responded Jinks. "For instance, I see you every day, but as to seeing you—"

"He never finished that sentence—Drake's gasp."

Absorbing the French Canadians.

An Ottawa correspondent estimates from the Canadian census of 1891, compared with that of 1881, that the province of Quebec has lost over 100,000 French Canadians and more than 40,000 English speaking people in 10 years. Most of them are credited with having come to the United States.

A Fatal Remark.

Gained in Strength

READ WHAT Ayer's Sarsaparilla did for the Invalid Daughter of a Prominent Lowell Tradesman.

"My daughter had for a long time been troubled with violent headaches and sleeplessness. She was pale, had no appetite, and was losing flesh rapidly. She took various remedies for her trouble, but received no benefit until she commenced using Ayer's Sarsaparilla. After taking half a bottle, she began to feel better. By a continued use of this medicine, her appetite returned, her cheeks began to fill out and show the gain in strength, her headaches disappeared, she slept better, and now says she feels like a new person."—F.
